Abstract:

Australia's coffee culture is among the most distinctive in the world, with Melbourne widely regarded as the global capital of specialty coffee. This visualisation explores the scale and growth of Australia's café industry through key metrics including café density by state, industry revenue trends, consumer preferences, and Melbourne's standing on the world stage. Using data from the Australian Bureau of Statistics and industry reports, the project presents a data-driven portrait of how coffee became central to Australian identity and economy.
